

BYRNES AND NELLIE BLY.

He Tells Her All and She Enlightens Him Considerably.

THE FIRST AMONG DETECTIVES.

This He Cannot Deny, but His Only Joy in a Year Is Five Days in a Catboat.

HE ISN'T AFRAID TO FACE ANYBODY.

The Qualities Which Make a Perfect Detective About the Same as Those Which Make a Perfect Angel—No Dreaming or Reading for Him.

Supt. Byrnes is a pretty big man. He knows it, and what's more, his enemies know the same thing.

ARE YOU THE GREATEST DETECTIVE IN THE WORLD?

"I never did a thing in all my life that made me afraid to face any man, great or small," he said, as he tilted back in his chair and looked at the detective over a palm-leaf fan.

"You mean in reality or in fiction?" he demanded quickly. "Both," "I'm afraid to say," he declared, earnestly.

"I don't think a good woman would be a detective, and a bad woman can't be a detective," he said, looking at the woman of the world who sat next to him.

Several months passed, and no purchase was made for the house. The rumors of financial embarrassment passed, and the house was still for sale.

BOY SMUGGLER LOOKED UP.

"Say, young fellow, have you got any whiskey?" said Marine Herman S. Norton, addressing a boy who was sitting on the coal dock at the Navy-Yard late yesterday afternoon.

QUEER C. P. HUNTINGTON.

He Fears Lost When He Moves Into His New Granite Palace the Death-Angel Would Move In Too.

THAT IS WHY HE WANTS TO SELL IT.

The Millionaire Has Another Superstition, One About Elevators, and Nothing Can Change His Mind.

BY THE MORPHINE ROUTE.

A Despondent Englishman Kills Himself After Acquiring His Employer of Having Swindled Him.

Alfred Herdman, forty-five years old, was found yesterday morning at Bowers Bay Beach, near the Grand Pier, unconscious from morphine, which he had taken with suicidal intent.
